FACE IT!

Perth is using new clear bins to keep waste in your face and not out of mind. The city is recruiting people to be ambassadors for Face Your Waste in Western Australia. They're asked to use the see-through bin for one month with no bag. Bins move around to different locations, bringing clarity to the issue of correct disposal, proper recycling and waste reduction.

Ireland to hoist littering fine to €250

Fines for littering in Ireland are on the rise. Denis Naughten, communications minister, announced a new maximum of €250 is on the way, a hike of €100. At the same time he released the nation's 2017 litter audit results. Cigarette-related litter comprised more than half of the total (56.3%). The bulk of the remaining detritus was packaging (17.6%), food-related (9%) or sweet related (7.9%). Pedestrians (42%) and motorists (19%) shared most of the blame for it, the study said. On the bright side, the number of areas deemed litter free has risen a bit and there are slightly fewer "moderately polluted" areas.

Straw program sips on its success

A plan to cut down the use of plastic straws, founded by a Beach Patrol group in Melbourne, AU is expanding. The Last Straw calls on more restaurants, bars and customers to stop using a straw, what is now seen as a needless and environmentally unfriendly item. Tangora Blue Foundation has taken the cause to Mornington Peninsula businesses.

Program tackles building sites

Melton City in Victoria. AU will hire a second Litter Prevention Officer (LPO) to continue with a building site-focused program that targets owners of construction sites with a blend of education, an amnesty period and penalties if their sites remain littered. The program began in 2017 with one LPO. Noncompliance dropped to 21% from 63%. Builders are given a jargon-free rulebook and advance notice of inspection blitzes. They are expected to fence the site, contain the waste and identify the owner's name and contact info on a sign out front. There are 3,000 new residential properties constructed each year in the region. Ideally, building sites will be inspected four times annually.

DID YOU KNOW?

Morocco struggles to control its plastic pollution. Despite being one of the first African nations to ban plastics bags in July 2016, some small factories continue to manufacture them illegally. In March authorities seized 2.96 tons of illicit plastic bags from a factory in Tangiers. British Ambassador to Morocco Thomas Reilly voiced his concern this week about the country's plastic litter problem.
