

Dedicated to lowering the rate of littering

Issue 32, Vol. 7 No. 425

THIS WEEK IN "LITTERLAND"

A 2019 City of Toronto poster came in response to the top cause of apartment fires - flicking lit butts from balconies. A Litterland poster would have included the reminder that "Littering is illegal".

Ontario's Butt Blitz underway

Litter-devoted non-profit A Greener Future is using RBH tobacco funding from Unsmoke Canada to expand Butt Blitz - its ongoing dedicated volunteer drive to collect and recycle littered cigarette butts: more than 110,000 and counting this round so far. The group plans to apply to Rothmans, Benson &Hedges for funds to do even more in 2022.

DID YOU KNOW?

Coca-Cola tops the list of the UK's twelve mostlittered items followed by: PepsiCo, AB InBev, McDonald's, Mondelēz International, Heineken, Tesco, Carlsberg Group, Suntory, Haribo, Mars and Aldi. Two-thirds of 9,998 branded litter items collected for the analysis were traced back to these dozen companies out of 328 identified.

Telling smokers to change

A Litterland reader recently commented that smokers litter butts profusely with very little push back. Starting the habit of smoking is so routinely discouraged that no instructions for use or directions for disposal appear on the package to teach the smoker to use a bin and not to throw product remnants on the ground. People need to speak up to smoking friends and family members to inspire right action and ask industry and governments to do more.

Isle of Wight asks, "What's your excuse?"

An anti-littering push on the Isle of Wight is fuelled by council's new partnership with Keep Britain Tidy and has given birth to "What's Your Excuse", launched August 25. Using signs installed at known problem locations, its intention is to get people prone to littering and dumping to think about what they are doing. Prime motivators for this continuing campaign were the rise in post-lockdown littering, dog messes and fly-tipping.
